

planning a wedding

Planning a wedding is easy. All you need is a vision, a budget, and at least one [1_____].

Step one: choose a date. Ideally something like [2_____], when the [3_____] are in full bloom and people are generally less [4_____].

Next, you'll need a venue. Popular options include a [5_____], a [6_____], or—if you're feeling bold—a rented [7_____].

The dress? Oh, you'll know it when you find it. Just prepare to try on at least [8_____] and cry exactly once over the perfect [9_____].

As for your partner, they'll probably wear a [10_____] and request to walk down the aisle to [11_____], because why not?

Guest lists are fun! Just make sure to invite everyone who matters, plus [12_____], who you couldn't leave out after what happened at [13_____].

Themes really pull the wedding together. You might go with “[14_____] meets [15_____],” which gives you an excuse to buy bulk [16_____] and dramatically say “it's aesthetic.”

The day itself will go perfectly. Unless someone forgets the [17_____], or your cousin gives a toast that references [18_____].

But that's all part of the charm.

At the end of the day, you'll be married, full of [19_____], and ready to spend forever with your person—plus a few leftover boxes of [20_____].
